"THE DEVIL'S AUCTION" AT THE TRADERS G. AND

Nearly every person of the big audience that packed the Traders Grand opera house Wednesday night to witness the production of Charles H. Van Everlasting Devil's Auction, felt grimy, dirty and choked with dust during the performance and for some time afterwards. The chief comedy part of this well known production is brought about by the antics of the devil contortionists and very time these poor devils measured their lengths on the floor, and these times were many and often they came up fairly reeking with dirt, dust and filth from the stage floor to the intense disgust of the audience. Of course this was not so much the fault of the actors of the play but at any rate the effect upon the audience was not of the most edifying character. Several persons were near to remark about the probable efficacy of a little scrubbing or the judicious use of a little wet sawdust and a good broom on the stage floor.

With the exception of the spectacular effects of scenery and costumes, the production was very ordinary and it is probably safe to venture the assertion that a large majority of the audience will say today that they have witnessed far better productions of a like character and far better productions of the Everlasting Devil's Auction.

A goodly quantity of "horse play" was indulged in by the important characters of the play in order to accommodate the scenic and property effects and it was of such sterile quality that it was considerably tiresome. The comedy was rather flat. The chorus was pretty good in the evolutions and dancing but not by any means the prettiest or most graceful that has ever appeared on the local stage. George M. Topick, in the part of Tobey the Donkey, who is transformed into a man, and a terrible cold and his part was poorly rendered. Miss Alice Stoddard as Carlos, the poor shepherd, was good in her part. W. H. Loria, as Per Andoche, and the other parts as "doublets" in was very good. Lillian Hornum, as Count Fortunio, was awkward and stiff throughout the play. Janet, the milkmaid in the person of Emma Silger, did entirely too much screaming to suit the audience as was attested by the feeble applause she got for the choros to her song and dance stunts. She had to take, George Hermann, as Chas the Imp of Darkness, was excellent in his acrobatic work but he certainly did look grimy and dirty after he had touched the floor. The other characters were fair.

By far the best part of the whole production was the specialty act by the Marvelous Maxsmith duo as they were named on the program. They performed a ladder balancing and juggling stunt that was very clever. It was one of the best specialties ever shown here.

The costumes and scenery were very elaborate and pretty. There were many changes of costumes, many changes of scenes and several beautiful spectacular effects.

Next attraction—Marie Wainright, in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," Monday, March 27.

CENTENNIAL NOTES

The first locomotive used in Oregon, which was built in 1861, is to be exhibited at the Lewis and Clark Exposition. The locomotive is only 13 feet long and has been retired from active service for over thirty years.

The Lewis and Clark Fair Guards will be selected from the Oregon National Guard. There is but one exception to this rule. Cherokee Bill, who accompanied President Roosevelt in the assault on San Juan Hill, has been given a position at the special request of the President.

Several concessions have been let at the Lewis and Clark Exposition which require considerable more space than the original plans for the "Trail" would permit. The amusement street is being enlarged so as to provide several thousand square feet of additional space.

Hundreds of car loads of exhibits for the Lewis and Clark Exposition have already arrived and more come every day. They are being stored in the finished buildings until time for installation.

The electrical display at the Lewis and Clark Exposition will be the most unique and attractive ever planned for a similar enterprise. No expense has been spared to make this feature most attractive.

The display which Turkey will make at the Lewis and Clark Exposition will be worth $600,000, consisting to a large extent of rugs, many of which are of fabulous value.
